CHANGING YOUR UNIVERSITY COURSE PREFERENCES

Why would you change your preferences?

- You got a better mark than you expected, and want to apply for a more competitive course
- Or, you didn't do as well as you'd hoped to, and want to change to a more realistic course
- Perhaps you've changed your mind in the time between applying and getting your results, and want to go down a different path
- A new (and more appealing) course has just become available. Or you recently found out about a course you didn't know existed
- Sometimes universities choose to cancel a course, and you may want to replace it

WHY You Wouldn't Change Preferences?

- If you have been offered a UOW Early Admission (or any other University Early Admission Program such as SRS), then you need to ensure that your first preference matches the course that you have been offered.

Changing Preferences

- You can change the order of your preferences – or even the courses you've selected – as often as you like before the closing dates for each offer round. Simply log in to your application or the My UAC mobile app using your UAC application number and UAC PIN. You can't change your preferences by phone, letter or email.
- Check the closing dates for changing preferences for each offer round. You can only receive one offer per round, so re-ordering your preferences after each round may give you multiple offers to choose from.
- There are short periods before each offer round when you are unable to change your preferences in your application.
- Some courses have early closing dates. This means that you must have the course as a preference by the course closing date. Check the latest course information through the course search.

10 THINGS I WISH I'D KNOWN BEFORE STARTING UNIVERSITY --

1. 1. University subjects may or may not prepare you for a graduate role

Engineering graduates (particularly in the Mechanical field) often remark that they apply very little of what they learn at uni in their graduate roles. It can be disillusioning to realise that the many hours spent studying higher level mathematics and solving engineering problems analytically will probably not translate into the workplace. Before starting university, it's well worth talking to uni graduates and young professionals in your chosen career to get a feel for how they spend their days: it may be very different from the university course description.

2. 2. Work experience is everything (and may be very difficult to obtain!)

Following on from this, work experience is as instrumental to obtain a graduate role as university grades are (or even more so). Make the most of any industry contacts you make throughout university and be aware that a lack of relevant work experience may limit your employment opportunities.

3. 3. Choose a career based on your motivations...

Everybody has different advice for choosing a career: some say to follow your passions, while others advise you to choose a career that offers the most financial stability or lifestyle flexibility. The right path for you depends on your individual motivations: is it more important for you to choose a career that satisfies your creative drive or one that allows you to make a difference? Or, is financial security or the ability to work flexible hours a bigger motivator? Do some research about how your chosen career fits with these motivations before starting university.

4. 4. ...but keep your talents and interests in mind!

It feels like stating the obvious, but choose a career with your own strengths and limitations in mind. A natural aptitude or interest in your chosen field can only help! If you're racking your brains about what path to go down, think about your pastimes and hobbies and see what they can be applied to.

5. 5. Be prepared to adapt your lifestyle for your career (or else choose another one!)

It's not only important to think about what your job will entail, but also where and when it will take place. For example, engineering roles can involve FIFO (fly-in fly-out) components or work in remote regions, while teaching graduates are often required to work in rural communities. Think about if you're prepared to move interstate, overseas or live remotely before starting university and before you embark on a career path.

6. 6. Computational thinking is more important than your course curriculum may suggest

It will come as no surprise that tech skills are increasingly valued in many fields, and this is only starting to be reflected in school and university curricula. If you are lacking skills in this area (like myself!), I highly recommend researching extra-curricular courses, or even selecting a tertiary degree with a focus on fundamental computer science or data analytics. But don't despair, there are plenty of jobs that don't require software engineer-level skills.

7. 7. The job market is ever-changing

When I enrolled in engineering (in the middle of the mining boom), there were more graduate positions than there were graduates to fill them; by the time I was nearing completion, industry reps told me that the job market was the worst they had ever experienced. Research the current job market (in the country you want to work), but be prepared for it to change.

8. 8. Make the most of extra-curricular opportunities

The extra-curricular activities you choose can be instrumental shaping your career pathway, or even in landing a job. Luckily, most universities facilitate a myriad of opportunities at the undergraduate and Honours level. If you'd like to live overseas, going on exchange is an unparalleled experience. Chat to your university lecturers or supervisors to see if they have any summer research opportunities, or apply to some of the formal programs. If there are subjects you excelled in, consider taking on a tutoring role. Join a student society, or better yet become an executive member. See what volunteering opportunities are available. And read (at least skim-read!) those school or faculty student emails for updates.

9. 9. Value and foster your unique skills

Unique skills make you stand out to employers, on both a professional and personal level. Some skills that have opened doors for me (or that I've noticed my peers benefit a lot from) include language skills (spoken or programming), practical skills (particularly automotive, machining or carpentry) and creative skills (such as photography and design).

10. 10. Don't stress about getting perfect grades Everyone who said your grades won't matter in five years' time was right! Focus more on learning new skills, building connections with mentors and exploring all of the options that are available to you at uni. And enjoy yourself!
